

Graham Sutch

I have always been interested in art, it was my best subject at school. I followed in my grandfather's footsteps, who was a watercolour artist unlike my father who was a technical man. Although, I was very good at art at school, the art master told my parents that I would never make any money with my art work. I would now like to prove him wrong!!

However, I did not go to art college taking up a career in retail instead, working at Simpsons in Piccadilly and then John Lewis department store in Oxford Street for over 30 years.

I joined the John Lewis Art Group working mainly in oils, my preferred medium. The selling skills learnt during my career in retail are now used to enthuse others, promote my art work and ultimately sell them a painting of their choice.
